Premiers to talk energy and Mulcair

Meeting. Western premiers Brad Wall, Alison Redford and Christy Clark to work on energy strategy

The environment, energy and federal NDP Leader Tom Mulcair are on the agenda Tuesday when leaders of the western provinces and territories get together.

"There is going to be an emphasis on environmental regulation," said Alberta Premier Alison Redford, who will host the meeting in Edmonton.

Redford didn't refer to Mulcair by name, but said: "My expectation is we'll probably speak a little bit about the view that other national leaders have taken of western premiers in the past month or so, so it should be an interesting discussion."

Mulcair made headlines recently by saying strong growth in the petroleum industry, particularly in Alberta's oilsands, has led to a higher dollar that is hammering manufacturers in Central Canada.

Premiers Redford, Brad Wall and B.C.'s Christy Clark disparaged Mulcair's remarks as divisive and ill-informed. He in turn dismissed the premiers as "messengers" of Prime Minister Stephen Harper.

Redford said her goal is not to divide, but to unite under what she terms a Canadian energy strategy. The plan would be for all provinces and territories to work together with the federal government to advance development of Canada's energy industry and address environmental protection. It would include, for example, working to improve rules and regulations, collective lobbying in the global marketplace and shared responsibility on trans-boundary projects such as pipelines.

Harper has said he's intrigued by the idea, and Natural Resources Minister Joe Oliver said, while in Edmonton on Friday, that he supports "a collaborative approach to energy development." THE CANADIAN PRESS

Lunty wins third straight Saskatchewan Marathon

One of the best.
Annual race continues to grow each year

MORGAN MODJESKI
morgan.modjeski@metronews.ca

For the third year in a row, Brendan Lunty, from Camrose Alta., has won the Saskatchewan Marathon. And after winning the event for a fourth time overall, he says Saskatoon is one of his favourite places to compete.

"I love coming here," said Lunty. "The trails here are so nice and the running community is so good. People are cheering up and down — you can tell people really embrace this."

With a total time of roughly two hours 34 minutes, Lunty said he was thrilled with the finish.

"It feels great," he said. "To come over first feels really good."

Lunty explained that with experience, mental elements of the race have gotten easier, but noted finding time for the physical-training aspect can still be a challenge.

"I've done enough of these that the mental training is getting easier. I know what's coming, I know what to expect — but the physical training is hard. It's 110, 120 miles a week and I have a family and a job and everything, so it means being up at 4 a.m., 4:30 a.m. to get a workout in before the baby gets up.

"But it's part and parcel. You have that end-goal in mind, so you just know that's what I have to do to achieve that and that's what I'm going to do."

Organizers of the race said the event's 34th year was one of the best, as roughly 3,900 people participated.

"There have been record numbers this year and the excitement has just grown and grown," said Lorrie Dobni, president of the Saskatoon Road Runners Association.

"People from all over Canada are coming to run our race. And with the bigger profile, the more race money (there is) for the winners. I think it's drawing more elite racers all the time, and I think it's just going to get bigger and bigger."

Race director Shad Ali echoed Dobni, saying he expects big things for the future of the event as it continues to grow and attract more people from inside and outside of the province.

"The future for this race is tremendous," said Ali. "When you have your 10K growing at the pace that we are, you see people graduating from the 10K to the half-marathon, and that's also growing.

"This race is one of the few races in North America that has the full-marathon contingent growing each year," he added.

"Many of the other races in the country are saying the number of full marathoners has shrunk, so it's tremendous to see that kind of growth here."

Brendan Lunty finished the Saskatchewan Marathon in roughly two hours 34 minutes on Sunday morning, capturing his third straight victory in the race. MORGAN MODJESKI/METRO

Huskies recruiting players from near and far

Saskatoon blue-liner Alyssa Dobler is excited to lace up at Rutherford Rink for the green and white this season. DORIAN GEIGER/METRO

Although united under the umbrella of the University of Saskatchewan Huskies women's hockey team, new recruits Alyssa Dobler and Tehnille Gard are from very different parts of Canada.

Dobler, a Saskatoon blueliner, and Gard, a goaltender from Yellowknife, are two of six new Huskies recruits who hail from across the country.

"Playing hockey in Yellowknife, you don't have the training ability you have when you're down south with the facilities and all the travelling you do," said Gard. "Not many people leave Yellowknife to go play somewhere else."

Following the departure of Huskies netminders Mackenzie Rizos and Vanessa Frederick, Gard will be vying for a starting position this season.

It was rare for Gard to leave her hometown during the hockey season and only once or twice a year she would commute to Grande Prairie, Alta., or Calgary for a tournament. In a nationwide league like Canadian Interuniversity Sport, Gard's capacity for road trips will be tested.

Despite the 1,200-odd kilometres that separate Yellowknife from Saskatoon, Gard maintains a Saskatchewan connection — her grandma is from North Battleford and she also played a year of AAA midget hockey in the northern Saskatchewan community for the Sharks.

After losing seven veteran players due to eligibility, the Huskies are in search of rookie depth. Dobler, 17, is confident she can fit this niche.

"I like to play physical and really heads-up hockey," said Dobler.

Head coach Steve Kook is convinced Dobler will be a solid addition to the blue line.

"We watched Alyssa over the past couple years develop as a player. We're really lucky she fits the bill in terms of what we're looking for skating- and skill-wise. And that she wanted to stay at home and play in front of her parents, friends and fans," said Kook.

Dobler, who recorded four goals and 17 assists with the Saskatoon Stars last season, has idolized the Huskies her entire life.

"It's always been my dream to play for the Huskies ever since I was little. I would always go and watch the games and afterwards I would go get their autographs and talk to them," said Dobler.

Change. Members of film industry excited about cabinet shuffle

As Kevin Doherty takes over the position of minister of parks, culture and sport from Bill Hutchinson, members of Saskatchewan's film industry are optimistic about the change.

Bob Crowe is a member of the Saskatchewan Motion Picture Industry Association (SMPIA) and co-president of Angel Entertainment in Saskatoon, and he said he feels Doherty will keep talks between the industry and the province open.

"It wasn't a shuffle, it was a complete organization of the team around (Premier Brad Wall)," said Crowe. "Overall, I'm fairly optimistic that he's closer to having it right with this team — specifically if you're talking about the exit of the former parks, culture, sport minister, Hutchinson."

He continued: "I think that was almost a foregone conclusion — you could see Minister Hutchinson had lost support from a large part of the people who he was supposed to be representing, and I don't think that's a viable position for a minister to be in for very long."

Crowe said even though the Saskatchewan Film Employment Tax Credit is gone, he feels Doherty is willing to work with the industry to find something that works for both parties.

"I think he's been very clear that the film employment tax credit as it was constituted is gone and not coming back, but I think he is open to creative solutions and looking to the industry to bring those solutions to them," said Crowe.

David Cormican, another member of the SMPIA and head of development for Minds Eye Entertainment in Regina, agreed with Crowe, saying this shift is a positive step for the province's movie-makers.

Doherty said he's willing to work with members of the film industry to find new solutions, but affirmed that a refundable tax credit is off the table, adding the SFETC will still be eliminated by the end of June.

Missing Winnipeg brother and sister found in Mexico

Kidnapped in 2008. Children were kept in a home with barbed wire, security cameras, say media reports

BERNICE PONTANILLA
Metro in Winnipeg

Two Winnipeg children at the centre of a high-profile child-abduction case have been located in Mexico, regional media report.

Siblings Dominic and Abby Maryk were abducted in August of 2008 when they were seven and six respectively. They were on a court-ordered visit with their father, Kevin Maryk, when they vanished.

Since then, their mother, Emily Cablek, and Winnipeg police have worked very hard to find the missing pair, holding press conferences and posting videos in 2009 and 2011 for the safe return of the children.

On Saturday, police issued a media advisory stating that they have been involved in a lengthy investigation with Mexican authorities and "significant developments" occurred on Friday.

Police would not comment further, saying that details will be made public during a press conference on Monday at 11 a.m.

Mexican newspaper Milenio said a Guadalajara man named "Armando" saw a television news report that mentioned the missing children, kids who bore a striking resemblance to two children who for the previous couple weeks had been living in a home in the area of Jardines de los Puentes in Zapopan.

Media reports stated the home was equipped with security cameras and barbed wire. Pornographic materials and drugs were reported seized.

Miami police shoot and kill naked man found eating victim's face

Miami police shot and killed a naked man who mauled another man on a downtown causeway off-ramp on Saturday, chewing on his victim's face as horrified drivers looked on.

Local media reported that gunshots were heard at around 2 p.m. Saturday on the MacArthur Causeway off-ramp.

Witnesses reported seeing a naked man attacking the other man by viciously chewing on his face.

A woman who saw the two men fighting summoned a police officer, who instructed the naked man to back away. When the attacker refused to comply, the officer shot him several times.

Miami police confirmed the shooting in a press release but did not release the identities of the men.

Police did not provide details of the incident, but sources told CBS News that after the attacker was shot dead, police and paramedics were able to rush the victim, whose face had been mauled to the point of being unrecognizable, to Jackson Memorial Hospital's trauma centre.

He is listed in serious condition but is expected to survive.

Javier Ortiz, a spokesman for the Fraternal Order of Police in Miami, told The Associated Press that the officer who fired at the suspect "is a hero and saved a life."

Police have requested video surveillance tape from the Miami Herald newspaper office, which is located close to the MacArthur Causeway.

Pope's butler stands accused in scandal

The Vatican's investigation into the source of leaked documents has yielded its first target with the arrest of the Pope's butler, but the investigation is continuing into a scandal that has embarrassed the Holy See by revealing evidence of internal power struggles, intrigue and corruption in the highest levels of the Catholic Church.

The detention of butler Paolo Gabriele, one of the few members of the papal household, capped one of the most convulsive weeks in recent Vatican history.

The tumult began with the publication last weekend of a book of leaked Vatican documents. On Saturday, the Pope's own butler was arrested, alleged to be the mole who fed documents to Italian journalists in an apparent bid to discredit the pontiff's No. 2. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Houla massacre

UN condemns Syria after deaths

The UN Security Council on Sunday blamed the Syrian government for attacking residential areas of the town of Houla with artillery and tank shelling and also condemned the close-range killings of civilians there — but avoided saying who was responsible for the massacre of more than 100 men, women and children.

The council said in a press statement after an emergency meeting that the "outrageous use of force" against civilians violated international law and Syrian government commitments under UN resolutions to stop all violence, including the use of heavy weapons in populated areas.

Britain and France had proposed issuing a press statement condemning the attack on civilians and pointing the finger at the Syrian government for Friday's massacre. But Russia called for an emergency council meeting.

Afghan coalition disputes deaths

The U.S.-led coalition on Sunday disputed reports that eight civilians, including children, were killed in a NATO airstrike in a remote part of eastern Afghanistan.

Afghan officials said an airstrike Saturday night killed eight members of a family, but a senior NATO official said that so far, there is no evidence of any civilian casualties. The official spoke on condition of anonymity because he was not authorized to disclose the information.

Separately, NATO reported that three coalition service members were killed Sunday in eastern Afghanistan — two during an insurgent attack and one from a roadside bombing.

The coalition said it was working to find out more about allegations that civilians were killed in the NATO operation Saturday night. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Facebook's small investors bitter, divided on next step

Wall Street. In lawsuits, Morgan Stanley is accused of sharing negative analyst report about Facebook with favoured clients

The response from small-time investors to Facebook's debut as a public company has been equal parts frustration, confusion and bitterness. Fed up, some are dumping their shares and accepting the losses. Others, while miffed, are holding on and hoping to ride the stock's eventual success.

Some are irked over reports that Morgan Stanley, which guided Facebook through its public debut, allegedly told only some select clients of an analyst's negative report about Facebook before its stock began trading May 18.

Michael Hines had felt uneasy about Facebook. He thought the shares were priced too high, and the excitement overblown — especially once the company raised its target price for the opening two days beforehand. Yet when the chance arose to buy into the company's $38-US-a-share initial public offering, he seized it.

"I figured: Nothing ventured, nothing gained," said Hines, 61, a retiree and private investor in Boston.

Now, he wishes he'd listened to his misgivings. Instead, Hines watched with dismay as the stock languished on its first day, then slid on its second.

As the lead underwriter for Facebook's IPO, Morgan Stanley was expected to set shares at the highest price it thinks the market will bear. But investors have also come to expect that an initial share price will be low enough so the stock can climb on the first day, when interest typically peaks.

Looking back, some individual investors say they recognize that Facebook's initial $38 stock price was too lofty. It was more than 80 times the company's 2011 earnings per share. The average for companies in the Standard & Poor's 500 index is far cheaper, about 19 times earnings.

Television correspondent Sabrina Quagliozzi reports from inside the Nasdaq MarketSite in New York's Times Square on May 21.
RICHARD DREW/THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Among those who blame their brokers is Joshua Freeman, who said he bought 200 shares in the IPO after his broker at Morgan Stanley Smith Barney asked if he wanted in. Freeman says he's considering closing his account at Morgan Stanley.

Morgan Stanley disputes the allegations. "We have clearly put clients' interests first by correcting pricing on some trades that were mispriced because of trading glitches beyond our control," the company said in a statement.

CP Rail. Ottawa to table back-to-work legislation

The Harper government is expected to introduce legislation ordering striking workers at Canadian Pacific Railway Ltd. back to work on Monday after talks with the union broke off.

CP Rail and the union representing 4,800 workers who have been on strike since Wednesday confirmed that talks had broken off with little hope of resumption.

"With the mediator withdrawing and the federal minister releasing the parties this afternoon, the legislative process can now commence," said Ed Greenberg, a spokesman for CP Rail.

Labour Minister Lisa Raitt said she still hoped the parties could agree on a process that would end the strike, but made clear she would not wait long. Raitt said government officials have been talking with impacted industries, farmers and the mining sector, and the reports are that the strike is "starting to actually affect their operations."

"That's the kind of national economic significance we are looking for in order to intervene," she told CTV's Question Period.

The minister gave notice of intention to intervene shortly after Wednesday morning's walkout halted the company's freight-train service across the country, meaning she can table the bill as early as Monday and strikers can be ordered back to work later in the week.

As she did with two previous labour disputes — affecting Air Canada and Canada Post — Raitt cited the damage to Canada's fragile economic recovery for quickly bringing the strikes to an end.

Labour issues such as the back-to-work legislation, along with growing resistance to new employment insurance rules unveiled last week, are likely to dominate the agenda in the House, which resumes Monday after a week's recess.

CABINET SHUFFLE DEALS OUT SAME OLD SUITS

URBAN COMPASS
Paul Sullivan
saskatoon@metronews.ca

I'm notorious for noticing the wrong thing.

Premier Brad Wall no doubt spent weeks poring over the options for Friday's cabinet shuffle, trying to match the right man for the job (and as 14 out of 18 members of the new cabinet are men, at least I got the gender right).

It was quite the political tsunami: Seven people in, seven people out. Major portfolio changes: New ministers of justice, health, education, economy, energy and resources, corrections, and agriculture.

But when the vast majority of the ministers — coming and going — are grain-fed white guys with single-syllable handles like Brad, Bill, Don, Tim, Jim, Ken, Lyle, Gord and Russ, with the odd Randy thrown in there for syllabic balance, has anything really changed?

Too much uniformity

"Check out the team photo. Even the ties are from the same end of the spectrum. The proverbial Martian Who Just Landed might be forgiven for thinking that in Saskatchewan, at least, they like to clone the government."

Check out the team photo. Even the ties are from the same end of the spectrum. The proverbial Martian Who Just Landed might be forgiven for thinking that in Saskatchewan, at least, they like to clone the government.

This otherwise unexamined celebration of homogeneity in a land that now depends on diversity for its future makes you go "Hmmm," especially if you're from anywhere in Asia, South America and Africa. And where do most of the immigrants come from these days?

You guessed it.

This is not so much colourblindness as an absence. It's hardly the premier's fault. As you go over the list of 58 democratically elected Saskatchewan MLAs, with the exception of a tiny cadre of aboriginal MLAs who were here first, the available gene pool was permanently established in 1958.

Someone will point out we're a nation of immigrants (if you go back, oh, 14,000 years that includes the aboriginal people) and that goes for Saskatchewan, where the plains were settled by hardy, hard-working immigrants from Europe. Now their descendants rule the roost and there's a new generation of hardy, hard-working immigrants looking to repeat the pattern.

Unfortunately for Saskatchewan, which needs immigrants now more than ever to fill thousands of jobs, they want to do it in Toronto or Vancouver or even Winnipeg, where everyone is a visible majority.

Meanwhile, the feds aren't helping by closing the Regina immigration office and tightening the rules to favour immigrants who can speak the language and are relatively well off. I suspect that would eliminate a few of the current members of the cabinet whose forebears met neither criterion.

The future of this country is diversity. Full stop. And by almost any measure, the Saskatchewan cabinet is not diverse.

I don't imagine this will be on the agenda of the first meeting of the new cabinet, but at least I can dream in colour.

Rachel Nichols stars in Continuum, which premiered on Showcase last night. HANDOUT

Nichols heads into sci-fi territory with Continuum

New TV series.
Actress plays cop from 2077 sent back to the present in Canadian sci-fi drama airing on Showcase

scene@metronews.ca

Where many actors snub sci-fi and fantasy as frivolous genres where canny ideas and special effects take precedence over story and character, Rachel Nichols sees them as immersive playgrounds.

"I love the escapism and using your imagination," says the actress, whose past credits include Conan the Barbarian, GI Joe: The Rise of Cobra and JJ Abrams' Star Trek reboot. "Given the genre it's completely believable and it's fun."

Her love affair with make-believe continues with her starring role in the new Canadian series Continuum, which premiered on Showcase last night.

Nichols plays Keira Cameron, a cop from the year 2077 accidently sent back to the present where she tries to stop a political uprising before it can change the course of history.

Keira is "a little bit robotic," she says. "Human relations are not her strong suit." But while her hard-boiled intensity is a hallmark of the series' first episode, Nichols says the character will get a chance to loosen up over the course of the show's 10-episode first season. "The fish out of water theme gets played with."

The show's creators already have story arcs for the first two seasons tentatively planned out in what Nichols calls the show's Bible.

But Nichols prefers to discover things as her character does. "I don't like to look at that," she says. "I like to be on a need to know basis."

Unsurprisingly, Continuum is shot in Vancouver, a city that's played host to a bevvy of sci-fi shows in the past including the X-Files, Stargate SG-1 and Battlestar Galactica.

Despite her previous roles, Nichols had never visited the city until this January, but she thinks the cityscape lends itself to future worlds. "It's so believable, the architecture with the arenas," she says. "It is the future."

TV and film

Throughout her career Nichols has flipped back and forth between television and film making with regular appearances on Criminal Minds and Alias as well as landing dramatic roles in Shop Girl and Charlie Wilson's War.

- But where there was once a stigma against film actors doing television, these days, few people make a distinction between the two mediums. "I like bouncing back and forth," she says. "That great divide doesn't exist anymore."
- More importantly, she says, the time it takes to get a project to air is significantly shorter than getting a film into theatres. "TV is almost like instant gratification."

Will Smith

Reporter snubbed, MIB style

The Ukrainian red-carpet reporter who tried to kiss Will Smith — and ended up getting a slap from the Men in Black 3 star instead — is very, very sorry. "I just tried to kiss him in the cheek and he moved his head so fast," the reporter, Vitalli Sediuk, says in an interview with Hip Hollywood. "Then it turns out that I wanted to kiss him in the mouth or in the ear. It was chaotic." Overreactions aside, Sediuk regrets how things went down. "I do apologize for my behaviour," he says. "I think it was too much. Now I understand that it was too much."

Glee star Cory Monteith takes a stand for at-risk youth

THE WORD
Kate Webb
scene@metronews.ca

Before 30-year-old Victoria native Cory Monteith was belting out ballads on hit TV musical comedy Glee, he was a troubled youth struggling with drug addiction and the issues that often come with a broken home.

These days he's a goodwill ambassador for RE*Generation, an initiative to address youth homelessness supported by Virgin Unite, the charitable arm of Sir Richard Branson's Virgin Group of companies.

Metro sat down with the six-foot-three triple-threat in Vancouver on Friday to talk about how more than $50,000 in grants from Virgin Unite will help local at-risk youth. The money is going to the Broadway Youth Resource Centre, and a theatre program for youth called Project Limelight.

(Sorry, Glee fans, questions about the show and his budding romance with co-star Lea Michele were strictly off limits!)

M: How did you become an ambassador for RE*Generation?

CM: I started with RE*Generation on behalf of Virgin Unite three years ago in Toronto, something like that, raising awareness of Canada's national youth homeless problem: how many homeless youth there are in the country. It's such a developed, wealthy nation really, per capita. That shouldn't be a problem.

M: Is that something you saw a lot of growing up on Vancouver Island?

CM: Sure. It's strange to grow up in a place like Victoria. It's beautiful. It's a postcard, with all these tourists coming from all over the world to see this beautiful city, you know, miniature little British town, and you have kids sleeping the streets and stuff in sleeping bags, in doorways. It doesn't seem congruent, it doesn't work, doesn't seem right, and I think it's systematic. It's not a matter of resources or ability to fix the problem, it's just a matter of finding the people that are actually going to do something about it at a community level."

M: What does Project Limelight mean to you personally?

CM: This is the same woman (Maureen Webb, co-founder of the Project Limelight Society), the same program under a different guise, that started me and sort of ignited my passion for the arts. It's the reason I started acting, so my heart is close to this program because it's inspiring kids to do something different, get involved in their community. The networking that happens for these kids, they get to all know each other. It's priceless, and it brings people together, and it keeps people out of trouble. It did for me.

Mommy shaming: From 'Tan Mom' to Time mag

Parenting. Is it ever OK to judge mothers in the spotlight?

LINDSAY CROSS
Mommyish.com

This recent Time cover has caused much examination of mommyhood.

The Olympics are coming this summer. Let me tell you that if "Mommy Shaming" were up for a medal, there would be some fierce competition. Just how critical can we be when it comes to moms and their choices? I've recently gotten some first-hand knowledge that proves what a serious issue this has become.

I was pretty shocked when the simple act of allowing my daughter to occasionally put on make-up for special events created an internet backlash that didn't just take up mommy message boards, but landed a sidebar on the Yahoo homepage. While I never expected everyone to agree with me, because that's just ridiculous, I had no idea that so many people would choose to make huge assumptions about me and my life based on a five-minute snapshot of my daughter and me.

I was told that I'm a horrible parent who doesn't know how to discipline my child and might be "inviting" predators to assault her. All this over lip gloss and blush.

But the more I thought about this surprising outrage, the more I realized that I was just a small blip on the radar for mommy shaming everywhere. I was lucky.

For whatever reason, our culture has decided that it's perfectly acceptable to tear apart women for their parenting shortcomings. In fact, we seem to enjoy it.

The perfect example might be the story of "Tan Mom," a New Jersey woman who was arrested for possibly endangering her daughter by taking her to the tanning bed.

Patricia Krentcil's seriously bizarre appearance sparked a media frenzy, discussions of tanning addiction and of course, concern for Krentcil's five-year-old daughter who turned up to school with a severe sunburn.

But this story has been so much more than a mom who seems to have a severe addiction. It's been a huge joke, appearing on SNL and prompting an insulting exchange with Jersey Shore's Snookie. Before we even know exactly what happened, we've all judged, tried and convicted this woman. She claims that her daughter got burnt playing out in the sun, and if you see the little girl's red hair and pale complexion, it's easy to assume that she reacts really strongly to a little sunlight.

"Tan Mom" and her legal issues are a glowing reminder that we still need to educate people on the dangers of skin cancer. It's a reminder that addiction can take many forms. And it might even be a situation in which this little girl needs a new home until her mother can come to terms with her mental health issues. But did it need to be a circus where we all point and laugh at the crazy lady?

Whatever the questionable parenting practice is, there's probably a group of upstanding citizens ready to rip a mom to shreds because of it. Look at the controversial Time magazine cover.

Women who don't breastfeed are made to feel like horrible failures who are selfishly denying their children. But now women who discuss breastfeeding into the toddler years are warned that they're ruining their children for the rest of their lives. For a while it was Tiger Mothering, now it's Attachment Parenting that will get to face scrutiny and contempt.

Let's not even get started on Toddlers & Tiaras. As we've discussed plenty of times at Mommyish (a parenting website), we're firmly against the show that encourages women to sexualize and exploit their daughters on the kiddie pageant circuit.

But does that practice justify the serious hatred and vitriol that these women seem to inspire in people? I'm just not sure anymore.

The fact is, we all seem to feel pretty comfortable passing judgment on parents for big or small offences alike. So often, we see extreme stories like T&T or "Tan Mom" and we don't have a problem piling on the negativity. Lately, we're allowing that mentality to come out at smaller and smaller debates. And we're letting a single facet of a parent's life become the only thing that matters about them and their children.

Some moms, like June Cleaver (above) from Leave it to Beaver or Happy Days' Mrs. Cunningham (below), were considered by some TV viewers as being the perfect mothers . H/O

At Mommyish, a woman was criticized ruthlessly because she didn't know the dangers of organic toothpaste (no fluoride equals cavities for her toddler). And apparently, that single lapse in judgment makes her too "stupid" to adequately raise a child. This mistake is so egregious to some that she received the Holy Grail of mommy insults, "I feel sorry for your kids."

Maybe I'm still a little defensive, but I think in general that the kids will be alright. The new generation of little ones will adapt to the cultural changes just like we have.

It's the moms that I worry about. What divisive parenting practice will come up next, leaving a whole new set of moms open to ridicule and hostility?

Obviously, I think it's important to talk about parenting. I do it everyday. I think that having discussions about parenting practices helps us all make more informed decisions. But I also think that this openness and communication has led to the vilification of moms for big and little offenses alike.

We don't have to agree on everything. But as parents, maybe we should start trying to support each other, even when criticism feels like the natural reaction. Maybe we should step back and ask, "Is this practice actually endangering a child?" Because if the answer is no, hold back on those insults and try discussing your opinions without passing judgment or insulting anyone. The truth is that almost all moms are just trying to do the best they can. We simply all have different ideas of what that is. It doesn't make some right and some wrong, it makes us different. That's OK. We can still support one another.

Pregnancy

Watch your weight

If an expectant mother hopes to limit her chances of giving birth to an abnormally large baby, new research suggests her wisest course of action would be to control her own weight both before and during her pregnancy.

The study, published in the Canadian Medical Association Journal, challenges a growing consensus in the scientific community that elevated glucose levels in the mother are primarily responsible for overly large babies, a condition known as macrosomia.

Researchers at four Toronto-health institutions (Mount Sinai Hospital, Hospital for Sick Kids, St. Michael's Hospital and University of Toronto) conducted the study in response to a growing trend among medical professionals treating women for gestational diabetes, a temporary form of the disease only contracted during pregnancy.

Scientists monitored 472 women to gauge the effect of maternal weight, blood sugar and lipid levels on the size of a newborn child.

That data, published in the online issue of the Journal of Maternal Fetal and Neonatal Medicine, found that excessive weight gained during pregnancy increased the chance of producing a large baby regardless of whether the mother herself was overweight.

The melt-in-your-mouth goodness of mushrooms

This recipe serves two. NEWS CANADA

1. In small bowl, combine chèvre, 2 tablespoons of Parmesan, herbs and lemon zest. Mix lightly. Set aside.

2. In cast iron skillet over medium heat, melt butter. Once bubbling, sprinkle in dried chili flakes, raise heat to medium-high and add mushrooms. Cook 2 mins, stirring often, then add shallot and season with salt and black pepper. Continue to sauté until mushrooms browned and most of moisture has evaporated, 6 mins. Remove from heat, check for seasoning, and stir in thyme. Set aside.

3. Divide cheese mix over bottom halves of buns. Sprinkle reserved Parmesan over top, then place open sandwiches under hot broiler until cheese is golden and bread is toasted.

4. Meanwhile, toss arugula with olive oil, lemon juice and season with salt and pepper.

5. When the sandwiches are ready, pile half of the mushrooms on one cheese toast. Drizzle with olive oil if desired and top everything with arugula and top piece of bread. Repeat with the second sandwich.

Paint your way to cleaner air

Damage control. Can a new kind of paint 'react to pollutants and neutralize them'? Metro investigates

life@metronews.ca

Most efforts to combat air pollution focus on keeping pollutants from hitting the air in the first place.

Ultimately, that simply isn't possible — especially in the world's biggest, most polluted cities.

But now an innovative company in the Philippines has found a way to remove dangerous nitrogen oxides (NOx) from the air in traffic-snarled Manila.

… Using paint.

"We're trying to turn something that is harmful to human health and the environment into something that is essentially harmless," says Johnson Ongking, vice-president of Boysen Paints.

The product — called Boysen KNOxOUT — is an exciting new use for titanium dioxide, a chemical commonly used to make paint white.

"When you make it into a really small size, you amplify its ability to react to pollutants and neutralize them," Ongking explains.

"It also gives the paint self-cleaning properties. It's really powerful stuff."

Basically, the paint reacts with light and the water vapour in the air, snagging NOx and converting it into calcium nitrate, a far less dangerous compound.

"Calcium nitrate is used as a fertilizer," he adds. "So, in essence, what you've done is locked up a harmful gas into a solid particle, that can just be washed off the wall."

The paint causes the reaction, but isn't actually consumed by it. This means the titanium dioxide catalyst never gets saturated.

"As long as the paint's on the wall and you've got a source of light, the process just keeps going on. It's really the water vapour molecules doing the work."

Tests at high-pollution traffic junctions in Manila are showing a 20 per cent drop in NOx levels.

The company is now commissioning eight gigantic roadside murals to be painted with KNOxOUT — each a thousand-square metres.

"One of the things people do when they want to help the environment is to go plant a tree," Ongking says. "One square meter of our paints cleans as much NOx as a mature tree. One artwork of a thousand square metres is really like planting a thousand trees."

Early results are so encouraging, the paint is now being studied by cities around the world.

"There's been really strong interest," he concludes. "Air pollution is a problem globally."

Take that, pollutants: Boysen KNOxOUT paint can help remove dangerous nitrogen oxides from the air. ISTOCK IMAGES

Trends. Chronic diseases and elder care will impact health-care field in the coming years

YLVA VAN BUUREN
For Metro

The aging population and the prevalence of chronic diseases are two huge trends that will impact careers in health care in Canada in coming years.

"We must think through how we organize health-care services for the growing population of seniors," says Judith Shamian, president of the Canadian Nurses Association, Ottawa, "to make sure they stay as healthy and functional and at home for as long as possible."

According to the Canadian Institute of Health Information (CIHI), 93 per cent of seniors live at home and that's where they would like to stay for as long as possible.

At the same time, chronic diseases such as diabetes, heart disease, obesity and cancer are now the biggest global cost drivers in health care, says Shamian.

Here is a look at how these trends may translate into health-care careers.

DISEASE MANAGEMENT AND PREVENTION

By 2025, one in four Canadians will be older than the age of 65. And three-quarters of seniors have at least one chronic health condition, says Kathleen Morris, director of health system analysis and emerging issues at CIHI, Ottawa.

GERONTOLOGY

There is a growing need for health-care providers who specialize in the elderly. Research shows that seniors actually do better when they are cared for by doctors who specialize in the care of older adults — or geriatricians, says Dr. Ken Rockwood, geriatrician, professor and director of geriatric medicine research at Dalhousie University, Halifax.

INTEGRATED CARE

Integrated care will become more important with collaboration between the different health professionals.

HOME HEALTH CARE

Home health care is important for seniors who want to remain at home, but also because people are increasingly discharged early from hospital and still require continuing care, says Pam Nordstrom, director of the School of Nursing at Mount Royal University in Calgary.

TECHNOLOGY

Engineering and computer sciences have a role in health care because they can help make a home and public facilities more senior friendly — from memory aids to bigger utensils and shower chairs.

Specialize. X-rays and ultrasounds are critical

JON TATTRIE
For Metro

One was a revolutionary discovery that won the Nobel Prize while the other is a technology born of the Titanic disaster, and both X-rays and ultrasounds are a critical part of Canada's health-care system.

The two fields are related and some technicians are trained to operate both, but most specialize as either a radiological technologist or an ultrasound technician. X-rays primarily deal with people who have been injured, while ultrasounds are largely used to monitor pregnancies.

Julie McHugh is a radiological technologist for Capital Health in Halifax. She mostly works in the operating room, but also covers the emergency room and walk-in clinics. She likes the work variety, but says the round-the-clock shift work can take a toll.

"It is rewarding, but it can be stressful at times because working in the emergency, we do have the trauma situations," she says.

X-ray technicians produce images of internal organs and bone structure to help diagnose medical problems. They also educate patients about what is happening and ensure they receive the lowest possible amounts of radiation during the treatment. Most work in hospitals or private clinics.

X-ray technologists must complete a two- or three-year college or hospital program in diagnostic radiography, or have a bachelor of health sciences in the field, plus undergo a period of supervised training. Licensure with a regulatory body is required in all provinces. Certification by the Canadian Association of Medical Radiation Technologists is required in all provinces except Quebec.

Ultrasonography has its roots in the sinking of the Titanic, which compelled scientists to find better ways to detect underwater icebergs. An advanced version of that sonar technology is used today to monitor pregnancies, as well as to diagnose heart problems and brain disorders. Students must complete a three- to four-year university course in sonography and register with the relevant authorities.

Almost all ultrasound technicians work in hospitals, with a few employed by private clinics. Both radiological technologists and ultrasound technicians earn between $38,000 and $50,000.

McHugh says as well as having an aptitude for the technical work and a talent for problem solving, the job requires strong people skills to deal with other medical staff and patients.

Giro d'Italia. 31-year-old is first Canadian to win one of cycling's three major tour races

Canada's Ryder Hesjedal didn't realize history was within his grasp until he was about five kilometres from the Giro d'Italia finish line.

Aware he had a chance to overcome Joaquin Rodriguez's 31-second overall lead in Sunday's final stage, Hesjedal broke out onto the streets of Milan determined to keep victory from slipping away.

Only near the end did he find out he would become the first Canadian to win one of cycling's three major tour races.

"Nothing anyone could have said to me could have changed how hard I rode," he said.

Hesjedal took 34 minutes 15 seconds to complete Sunday's 28.2-kilometre individual time trial in sixth — 20 places ahead of his Spanish rival. His 16-second margin of victory was the second closest in Giro history.

"It's just been an unreal experience from Day 1, what the team was able to do. It's unbelievable," said the Victoria native, who finished the race in 91 hours 39 minutes two seconds. "This is incredible. It's a dream come true."

Like the rest of the riders, Hesjedal had been through a demanding mountain ride to the top of the Stelvio Pass in northern Italy on Saturday.

"Yesterday was extremely hard," he said. "I got through it and I knew as I was on the helicopter descending into Milan that I still had a shot. This morning I just felt incredible on my bike and I knew I could do it."

Though he hadn't taken his victory chances seriously before the race, Hesjedal's thinking started to change after he first wore the overall leader's pink jersey in Stage 7.

"The day I pulled on the jersey for the first time, I knew I was good and could accomplish something great and that drove me harder."

Prime Minister Stephen Harper was among the Canadians celebrating.

"This remarkable win in one of bicycle racing's most gruelling competitions is a testimony to Mr. Hesjedal's training, endurance, skill and competitive spirit," Harper said in a statement.

Bright future

Hesjedal, only the third non-Italian to win the Giro d'Italia in 15 years, said that his win will do wonders for cycling in Victoria and, he hopes, inspire the next generation of Canadian cyclists.

- "I think Canadian cycling is at the highest level it's ever been and I think this will just continue that movement," he said. METRO

Anton Zlobin scored his second goal of the game 17:51 into overtime to lift the Shawinigan Cataractes to their first MasterCard Memorial Cup title with a 2-1 victory over the London Knights on Sunday night.

Zlobin took a pass from behind the net from captain Michael Bournival and drilled a quick shot that beat Knights goaltender Michael Houser and sent the sellout crowd into a frenzy. The Cataractes forward leapt into the air before he was mobbed by teammates on the ice.

Zlobin had tied the game in the second period after Ryan Rupert scored in the first for the Ontario Hockey League champion Knights.

After the second period, the PA announcer reminded fans that air horns were "restricted," but the blaring went on just the same.

London had the better of the play for most of the game, keeping the Cataractes to the outside on defence and generating several chances at the other end.

Horoscope

Aries | March 21 - April 20. Make an effort to notice what goes on around you. If you keep your eyes and ears open you could make some serious money.

Taurus | April 21 - May 21. Get daily tasks out of the way as quickly as possible. You may or may not get a pat on the back for your efforts but it doesn't matter.

Gemini | May 22 - June 20. The stars suggest that something special is on the way.

Cancer | June 21 - July 22. Today you can finally put a name to your fears and work out why it is that you have been so uneasy of late.

Leo | July 23 - Aug. 22. Your path to success is through reaching out to other people. Work harder to bring down barriers that have been standing in the way of good relations.

Virgo | Aug. 23 - Sept. 22. It's time to get serious about your career. Take advantage of opportunities before they leave you behind.

Libra | Sept. 23 - Oct. 22. Nothing is out of reach once you make the decision to go for it. Remember that — and act on it.

Scorpio | Oct. 23 - Nov. 21. A problem that has been nagging away at you in recent weeks can be dealt with directly now.

Sagittarius | Nov. 22 - Dec. 21. Your challenge this week is to work with other people without letting their little ways irritate you — too much.

Capricorn | Dec. 22 - Jan 20. Today there may well be occasions when you act out of character and take risks that usually you would avoid like the plague.

Aquarius | Jan. 21 - Feb 18. Decide what it is you want to achieve, hold that vision in your mind's eye, then do the things that will make it happen. It's that easy.

Pisces | Feb. 19 - March 20. You may have to make some concessions over the next few days, including putting old disputes and disagreements to one side.
